

Terry's life is a bit of a drag

MADE UP: Terry shows off the cleavage that boosted his drag act

WHEN footballers finish their careers they hang up their boots.

When bricklayers retire, they put away their trowels.

But when a drag artist comes to the end of the road, it can be hard to put his past behind him.

Terry Durham reckons he has another six years in the business but there is one thing he will never leave behind — his 40-inch bosom.

Future

Terry took a course of hormones 17 years ago and his shapely figure helped him become a top-line act in the clubs.

Now it is time to look to the future and he has decided he will one day leave drag for the property business.

"But nothing will make me part from my boobs," he says.

"I have got used to them and I don't care what anyone says. I am sticking to them.

"It wasn't a difficult decision to make all those years ago. I knew what I was doing and it has made a tremendous difference to my career.

"Work is slack at the moment but it will pick up again. I think I am good for another six years. And when it finishes I have got my home and my tenants."

Terry — envied by women for his looks — lives in a three-storey Victorian house in Bradford. He has let two floors and plans to turn the ground floor into his own home.

He said: "I am as happy at home as I am on stage and not everyone can say they have done so well."
