I think off of that ³ taken as a whole could never renewed preAIDS. When the isoprenizone program started at U.A. Eldon was sent to me by Dr. Greenminger to ask that I try to get into the program because he knew my medical history and "sexually active" lifestyle, as they say. He was worried about me. I went and took their tests and they drew blood but said later I did not qualify for their study. But a year later they called and asked me to come in again as the FDA had allowed changed the criteria and now I might qualify.
So I went again and the results were bad enough that I now qualified for their study. They then told me that I was antibody positive, and had been the year on the now standard test. Nice of them to tell me a year later.

Also My immune system was now only functioning at $\frac{2}{5}$ the level it should relative to the T cell counts. To me that was tantamount to an AIDS diagnosis. They have twice conducted three test shots to see if my system will recognize candida, mumps and trichomon. And it does not! But I've had mumps for sure. So again one more indication I'm on a slippery down slope. The other is that the year before my T cells were at $\frac{3}{5}$. So I lost one fifth in one year. Not very good. Now it is just
